

21st CENTURY SCHOOLING: Designing Schools for Teaching Excellence

Date: 26th October 2009
Time: 4.30—6.30pm
Venue: Hilton Adelaide
Cost: $150 plus GST per attendee or $400 for teams of 3
(inc refreshments & tapas)
Limited bookings available

By participating in this workshop school leaders will be able to;

- Understand the need to transform the approach to school design
- Confirm the link between defined ‘student outcomes’, ‘whole school pedagogy’ and school design
- Develop some detailed implications of pedagogical vision on design features for schools
- Identify appropriate project management strategies for architectural design and construction
- Create an action plan for their school

The Facilitator:

Lindsay Cooper is an experienced Leader who has lived the Building Futures revolution in Victoria since the early 2000s in his own community.

Refer to <http://www.apolloglobal.com.au/AboutUs.aspx> for information about his principal and other system leadership experience.

The workshop will provide participants with the opportunity to identify and plan their school outcomes and their imperatives, informed by the experience of a five year journey which has led to the design of a P-12 college for 1600 students and 150 staff. Lindsay will articulate why it is crucial to achieve a 21st century teaching excellence model before school design rather than the reverse. His workshop is relevant to smaller modifications, major upgrades and new schools.

After working with Lindsay, participants will have an enhanced model for relating student outcomes, excellent teaching and school design that involves people at the local and system level. Further work leads to;

- Documentation of principles and processes to transfer knowledge about these connections into transformed teaching practice and meaningful school designs.
- The foundations of a performance development culture—“the glue that binds whole school development
